WHAT'S NEW AT HIPPOCRATES WELLNESS THIS MONTH?

ASK THE EXPERTS

Q. What's the number one thing I can do to help prevent dementia?

- Claire Naughton, Aberdeen, Scotland

A. Adequate sleep is by far the number one way to prevent dementia. This sleep must be deep and place you in a REM state. Eliminating sugar of any type. Avoid chemicals, heavy metals, etc., by consuming organic plant-based foods, wearing natural organic clothing, and using only organic cleaners and products in your home and workplace. Here on our campus, we have an anti-dementia/Alzheimer's protocol to assist those who are well into the process of memory loss.

- Brian Clement, PH.D., L.N.

Q. How detrimental to our health can household molds be and are there simple ways to determine if we have any issues and/or avoid them?

- Amy O'Brien, Toronto

A. Here at Hippocrates Wellness, we are offering a genetics test to reveal mold that may be in your system. Some people do not have the genetics to prevent the multitude of hazards that come from inhaling and absorbing this life form. Everything from brain fog to tumor growth to lack of inspiration has been linked to this newly discovered MOLD DISORDER.

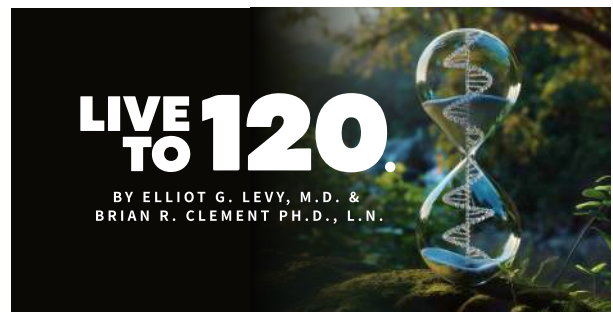

- Anna Maria Clement, PH.D., L.N.

THINK PIECE

MIND MATTERS

BY ANNA MARIA AND BRIAN CLEMENT PH.D., L.N.

Cognitive health is essential for overall wellbeing, influencing how we think, learn, and remember. Here are some evidence-based strategies to boost your brain power at any stage of life:

Early Intervention in Mental Health

Intervening early in life can be crucial in preventing long-term cognitive and mental health issues like depression. Research underscores the importance of addressing mental health during adolescence. Preventing the initial onset of depression in teens can reduce the likelihood of recurring episodes, which often lead to chronic illness and disability. With depression rates among teens rising, early intervention can set young people on a healthier, more resilient path, helping them avoid a lifetime of cognitive decline associated with chronic depression.

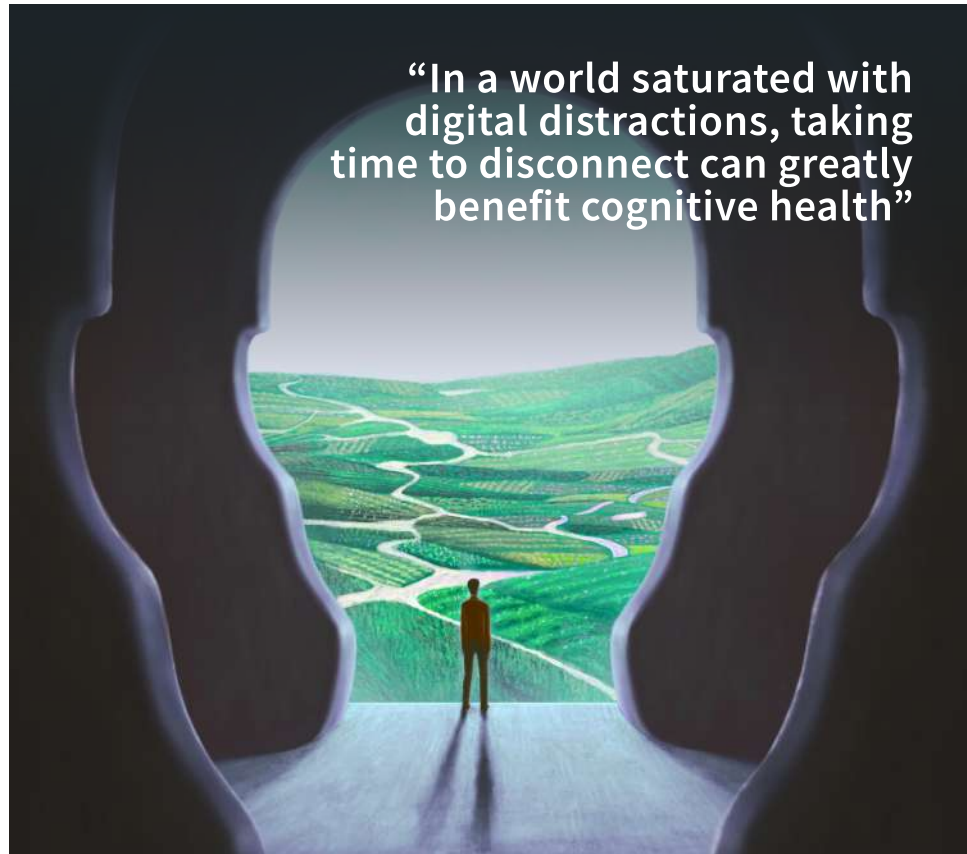

Effective Learning Strategies

How we learn significantly impacts cognitive function. Repetition and the “spacing effect” are well-known techniques for improving memory retention. Studies have shown that revisiting information over time, rather than cramming, leads to better long-term recall. However, the context in which you learn also matters. Variability in learning conditions—such as encountering information in different settings or formats—can enhance your ability to remember and apply knowledge in real-world situations. Adapting your learning strategies to include spaced repetition and varied contexts can strengthen cognitive function.

Digital Detox for Cognitive Balance

In a world saturated with digital distractions, taking time to disconnect can greatly benefit your mind. Digital detox retreats, like those offered at Hippocrates, allow participants to unplug from technology and reconnect with nature. Activities such as forest bathing and meditation help restore mental clarity and emotional balance.

Regularly stepping away from screens and immersing yourself in calming environments can recharge your cognitive functions and reduce stress.

The Benefits of a Morning Snooze

Contrary to popular belief, hitting the snooze button may actually have cognitive benefits. Recent research suggests that snoozing for a few extra minutes doesn't negatively impact your sleep quality. In fact, it may improve cognitive function upon waking. These findings challenge the notion that snoozing is harmful, instead suggesting that a brief, controlled snooze could be a simple way to enhance morning alertness.

Healthy Habits for Brain Health

Adopting healthy habits is fundamental to maintaining cognitive wellbeing. Start by eliminating behaviors that harm your health, such as poor diet and inactivity. Simultaneously, embrace activities that benefit you, like regular exercise and mindful eating. Consistently practicing these healthy behaviors reinforces cognitive resilience and supports long-term mental clarity. By incorporating these strategies into your life, you can effectively support and enhance your brain power, laying the foundation for a sharper, more resilient mind.

HEALING MY SON'S BRAIN TUMOUR AT HIPPOCRATES

"When my 14-year-old son was diagnosed with a brain tumor, it was a very difficult moment for him and the entire family. We've consulted with all the best experts throughout the United States. We have seen only one path through traditional medicine, radiation, brain surgery, and the prospect of living on medication for the rest of his life. We decided to take a different approach and went to Hippocrates Wellness. For the last 30 days my son has been there, he has been completely transformed! His energy levels, his blood test results, everything. He is now firmly on the path of self-healing. What he has learned at Hippocrates about the impact of diet, lifestyle habits, state-of-the-art equipment, and the various advanced treatments has been life-transformational. I highly recommend Hippocrates to anyone."
